Pompey, Big Bay Workhorse
Heads Parade and Wins
First Prize.

1,200 ANIMALS SHOWN.

Normans and Percherons Seen
by Many Well-Known
Society People.

Mrs. Aurel Batonyi's black and white spaniel, Talcum Puff and Deputy Police Commissioner Bugher shared attentions with the horses themselves at the second annual parade of the work horses to-day.

In other respects also it was a bigger, better parade than the one of last year, when the New York Workhorse Association, which is really a branch of the Women's Auxiliary of the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, undertook for the first time to get together a creditable turn-out of the big Normans and Percherons and native stock that do the heavy work on the city streets.

The grand stand in front of the Worth monument was already pretty well filled with society people and their tooting automobiles had massed thick about the small triangle opposite the Hoffman House when Frank Work's daughter, who married Burke-Roche first and divorced him and then married Aurel Batonyi, the whip, and is now trying to divorce him, drove up in a runabout.

Added a Bit of Color.

Something akin to a cheer arose from the massed photographers and reporters, for Mrs. Batonyi supplied a living note of color for the parade. For contrast of her high-piled red hair Mrs. Batonyi wore a satin coat of champagne color with pearl buttons the size of clay pigeons strewn thickly over it. On her left wrist was locked a gold bracelet as heavy as a slave fetter and from this topaz-studded manacle ran a gold chain which connected with a twin handcuff that bound the neck of Talcum Puff. Nor was that all. For in addition to his jewelry the white and black spaniel wore a morning coat and waistcoat of shepherd plaid of a jaunty cut and trim.

Either Talcum Puff or his valet had forgotten the shepherd plaid trousers that went with the coat and waistcoat, but T. Puff was all there otherwise. From a little pocket in his coat there projected, for just the proper distance and at just the proper angle, a white linen handkerchief—French and spangled for handkerchief—embroidered with white and pink fleur-de-lis. But if Talcum Puff had a cold when he left Newport he was well by the time he reached the Worth monument, and the handkerchief remained in its pocket throughout the parade.

On the other hand, Deputy Commissioner Bugher was in plain clothes, but all the eye could see well as he hustled up and down in the space in front of the reviewing stand and shouted orders in a voice that carried off on the front elevation of the Flatiron Building, two blocks south.

The Judges at Work.

Mrs. Batonyi took a seat in the second row because, as she said, she did not want to be conspicuous. The judges, who had the front places, were Mrs. James Speyer, wife of the banker, J. H. Baldwin, the horseman, and Miss Elsie De Wolfe, the former actress and present decorator. They were assisted in making their choices by Alfred Wikstam, son of a former president of the S. P. C. A., and Frank Goldberg, ex-president of the international "Camelers' Association." Among the well-known people in the stand were Mrs. Gordon Knox Belle, Miss Lillie

BATTERY DAN WINS PATRONAGE FIGHT

Courts Refuse to Compel the Relicensing of a Fruit Stand.

The contention that "Battery Dan" Finn, Tammany leader of the First Assembly District, and a City Magistrate, had used his power to prevent a fruit vendor at the Battery from obtaining a renewal of his permit, was thrown out of court by a decision of Mr. Justice Greenbaum in the Supreme Court today.

Richard Costas asked for a "personal injunction restraining Commissioner of Docks and Ferries Spooner from not relicensing Costas's fruit stand at the South Ferry. The decision tells the story.

"The plaintiff alleges that the predecessor of the defendant (Spooner), Commissioner of the Department of Docks and Ferries, granted him a license that said license or privilege by its own terms provides that it will expire by limitation of time on April 30, 1908; that plaintiff made an application for a renewal to himself of said permit and that the same was refused unless the plaintiff could obtain a letter requesting such renewal from a certain named person, a so-called political leader of one of the political organizations of this city, and that said person refused to give such letter, stating that he desired the use of the space for some person other than the plaintiff.

"Assuming that defendant, a public officer, used the power of his office as a means of political patronage, it is not apparent how this court in this proceeding can compel the defendant to renew the permit."

Mr. Greenbaum, in his argument for the injunction, delivered a scathing rebuke to Mr. Finn. It was couched in such terms that Justice Greenbaum looked surprised and asked many pertinent questions. Now he decides the matter on the questions of the law involved.

TRAFFIC SQUAD HORSE FALLS

Policeman Francis T. McAvoy is Injured.

Policeman Francis T. McAvoy, of the Traffic Squad, had an exciting adventure today while sitting his horse in line waiting for the Memorial Day parade to form. His horse "Cavalier" is one of the handsomest in the department, and a little fractious, and while the policeman was trying to control him he slipped on the wet asphalt and fell.

The officer fell with him, one leg under the horse's body. McAvoy's ankle was sprained and he was badly bruised. He was taken to St. Vincent's Hospital.

ROBBED BY MAN WHOM HE SAVED FROM DROWNING

Captain Pat Murphy's Adventure in a Fog That Spoiled His Birthday.

When Pat Murphy, skipper of the Sweet Evening Breeze, lying at Pier No. 4 North River, turned out on deck this morning—it is his birthday—his heart was free of ill against any man.

and ready, come the call, to render a service. The fog lay down about him and brought to his memory the bogs and breath of his dear old Ireland. Sure and Pat was feeling gay and fine. "Help!" came a cry from the water, startling Pat out of his reverie.

"Wan milt and I'll get ye!" cried Pat, running for a rope.

Pat hurried the rope end to the drawing man, towed him to the side of the canal boat and, winding his feet around a brace, leaned down and snatched the man from the water. Lifting him like a child he laid him on the deck. The man was unconscious.

Pat ran down the pier to find a policeman and get an ambulance. He also got some brandy to give the man.

"He's all in," Pat told Patrolman Sullivan, as they ran back to the boat. "Sure we'll have to go some to save him."

When Pat leaped aboard his craft all he found was a wet spot on deck, where he had deposited the drowning man. He ran into the cabin, but the man was not there. He was nowhere on board.

"Georra I saved a ghost!" yelled Pat.

"Stop!" Pat's voice rang out as the policeman started down the pier. "Oh, the beast!" cried Pat. "That's what I get. Look! He stole the rope I saved him with!"

The rope was surely gone and so was a ten-dollar hawser.

Behind a pile of cotton bales on the next pier they found the rescued man. All the fog curled up in fire as Pat expressed himself.

In Centre Street Court the man said he was Alexander Johnson, a homeless "roustabout."

"I had to get something to sell to get something to get a room to take off my wet clothes," he said. "I fell off the dock while asleep. Yes, he saved me, but I'd a done as much for him."

Magistrate Walsh held him for trial.

"LITTLE TIM" IN AUTO PARTY.
"Little Tim" Sullivan and Mrs. Sullivan, James B. Regan, of the Knickerbocker Hotel, and Mrs. Regan and James B. Colon, architect of the Knickerbocker Hotel, comprised an automobile party which left New York yesterday for a four hundred-mile tour in Mr. Regan's car. The party will travel as far as Shelter Island and return next Tuesday.
